Our fave section is the 3,000sqft alfresco space done aesthetically with mosaic flooring, plants, cage chairs and is equipped with a bar too! And the best part? It overlooks the bustling Park Street.

“ØL means beer and Terra means land and together Ølterra means the land of beer,” explained Rudresh Agarwal, co-owner of Ølterra, as we made our way through this Greek-themed all-day dining place housed in Stephen Court, next to Peter Cat. Spread across over 13,000sqft, Ølterra is primarily a brewpub (they are awaiting licence for the same) but in the meanwhile one could sip on over 22 signature cocktails at the 100ft-island bar. The food menu is a mix of Indian, fusion, Oriental, Mexican and Italian.

"We want to stay focused on the taste of the food first and not get carried away by only presentation. That's important but it's secondary," said Siddhant Agarwal, who co-owns the place. Ølterra has an offbeat quaint charm of its own, a place where you would love to indulge in brunches and meals with family and friends and also a place where you would love to indulge in exotic cocktails. t2 took a walkthrough ahead of its launch and here's what we loved.

With private spaces gaining popularity, there is also a PDR that can pack around 30 people. The touch of blue and velvet sofa adds a certain warmth and elegance to this space.

Spread across 9,000sqft, the sprawling indoor section has mixed seating, a DJ console and a giant screen with interesting visuals. The soft cascading lights add to the mood of the place.

Themed around the Greek world, the interiors of the brewpub are done beautifully by Sumesh Menon. The piece de resistance is a massive statue of Greek God Zeus hung from the ceiling of the 100ft island bar. There are hand-painted faces of Greek Gods on the walls.
